Thinking About The Past

Have you ever sat back and thought about some of the mistakes that you have made in the past? Often I do this when the repercussions of those mistakes begin to haunt me. In recent weeks I have been dwelling upon a mistake that I made about a decade ago. It is not some sin that I have committed, but rather a bad decision to not sell a house that I should have when I had the opportunity. By not selling this house and trying to maintain it with tenants, I have had to endure things that I had only seen on the news and read about happening to others. Undue stress and a large consumption of my time are just a few of the repercussions that I have had to deal with. They say a good preacher should be able to get a sermon out of a "stick in the mud". This simply means that when we see things or experience things in life, we should be able to find a Spiritual truth in it. As I have looked back on this experience a few things have come to mind. Patience. As I have endured through a few different types of personalities and lifestyles, I feel like my patience has been tested. It has been tested in ways that I would have never thought up myself. Is the lesson in patience over? Most likely not. Maybe this enduring of patience is preparing me for something bigger down the road. Companionship. When I first began this venture (13 years ago) I made some acquaintances and close friendships with some good people. Now that time has passed I am truly seeing the fruits of my labor. People whom I have not interacted with or even spoken to in years still remember me. The rekindled acquaintances and friendships are as if there were not distance or time between us at all. Is the lesson in companionship over? Most likely not. Maybe this rekindling of friends is preparing me for something bigger down the road. Endurance. This is probably the lesson that has stood out the most. When dealing with people, endurance is needed in many different facets. Enduring attitude, laziness, miscommunication, immaturity, etc. As people are a part of our lives we must learn how to endure the negative qualities they may possess. Is the lesson in endurance over? Most likely not. Maybe this enduring of negativity is preparing me for something bigger down the road. So, what is the overall point of this article? In life we are going to be handed things that are seemingly easy, but we will also be made (either by our own decisions or decisions of others) to deal with many difficult situations. How we address and deal with them is purely up to each person. Life is not always easy, but we do serve a God that has an easy time loving us. He died for us and when (not if) we go through trying times, He is there to help. We simply have to ask.

"Ask, and it will be given to you; seek, and you will find; knock, and it will be opened to you."

Matthew 7:7
