Can You Recommend Your Religion?

Quite often we find ourselves confronted with a question like this: “I’m thinking about buying a car, can you recommend your car?” There are any number of similar questions which could be posed. I am frequently asked if I liked my type of computer and would I recommend it to them. The important question is. “Can you recommend your religion?”

What makes something worth of recommendation? Generally, it is how well it serves us. If a car has given us a good service with very little upkeep, then we are usually happy with it, and can recommend it to others. If we have unusual good service, or perhaps other fringe benefits, such as good gas, mileage, then we often will give it an enthusiastic recommendation. On the other hand, if we get a lemon of a car, we find ourselves constantly carrying it to the shop, then we often will say to those asking “No, I cannot recommend it, and furthermore, I will not purchase another myself.”

Paul knew what kind of product he was dealing with "... so I know him whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to guard that which I have committed unto him against that day.” (2 Timothy 1:12). This confidence led Paul to recommend his religion to everyone. To Agrippa, Paul said “I would to God, that whether with little or with much, not thou only, but also, all that hear me this day, might become such as I, except these bonds.” Paul knew the value of his religion. He knew what he had and what it would do for him.

The question now is, "Can you recommend your religion?" Evidently some could not. They find many things, more important, recreation, television, rest, etc. The person who is sold on his religion will be one who will not only enjoy the privilege of it himself, but will want to convince others of its benefit. Paul said to those Ephesians Elders “And now I commend to you, God, and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you the inheritance among all them that are sanctified.” (Acts 20:32)
